

Julie Wall

My work is a culmination of experiences both past and present that come together to make up who I am. Growth, transformation, and change are at the basis of all my work. I study plants and animals native to a place and time I am referencing in my pieces in order to narrate a specific experience or change in my life. My confidence grows with each work and helps me to understand the person I am now and who I want to become in the future.

My recent work deals with universal themes of inequality and oppression. I create images dealing with issues from countries I have visited and have witnessed forms of these injustices. Pulling their ancient and modern subject matter into the composition, I weave together images that are beautiful yet compelling. Travel has always lent itself to the creation of art for me. How I change as an artist and as a person on a journey is most important.
